

Whether we realize it or not, the work and conscientious efforts of the Ohio Network for the Chemically Injured (ONFCI), have created awareness and change to protect many from needless toxic exposures in the environments where we all live and work, even if we do not reside in Ohio. ONFCI has achieved major milestones in bringing chemical injury and disability to the forefront by participating in government studies and research, creating educational materials concerning common toxins and their effects on health, and distributing them to the public through libraries, mayors, school superintendents, and others, both in Ohio and nationally through related networking groups. We of ONFCI have held related public educational forums, sparked legislation on human chemical exposure awareness, including the passage of Cuyahoga County Council's Resolution for annual acknowledgement of MCS every May, and have educated fire departments and hospitals, locally and nationally.

This year alone, ONFCI's educational articles and news releases have been published in various journals and on a number of websites, including: EcoWatch, Linking Employment and Disability, Ohio American Legion (in their Berea Post by the Lake Newsletter, on their Ohio website and in their State Newsletter), in the Arizona MCS Newsletter and on the ECHO website. ONFCI has contributed critical information to government agencies including the U.S. Access Board, Centers for Disease Control, and the EEOC. We actively support further research of chemical injury issues and encourage disability accommodations for those having critical health needs. We create awareness about chemically-compromised populations, such as Gulf War and Iraqi War veterans and 9/11 First Responders and others suffering the debilitating effects of their frequently-unidentified exposures to environmental toxins.

Every breath you take should be toxin-free and ONFCI has been with you in working toward achieving this health goal for you and your family since 1990. Today we need your help. Please send your tax-deductible donation to ONFCI, a 501C3 organization, so we can continue our work to make our schools, work environments, and neighborhoods safer for our children, pregnant mothers, veterans, elders, and all others.
